

Dear reader,

It has been over 25 years since I first invented a probiotic combination (450 billion, 8 strains). At that time, the understanding of and appreciation for the importance of the vast microbial community that lives within each of us was in its infancy. Today the clinical significance of the “microbiome” is front and center to a massive array of medical research around the world.

Over these past years I have had the privilege to work with some preeminent scientific experts in the fields of inflammatory bowel disease, irritable bowel syndrome, and liver diseases. The collaboration with these noted researchers produced over 170 original publications and the inclusion of the product in numerous international consensus treatment guidelines and review articles.

As a medical doctor, my commitment is to the people in need and as a result it gives me great pleasure to see my product helping so many individuals for their health conditions.

Recently, I made the decision to end a long-term partnership with my previous commercial partners. This decision was made to ensure that my product is available at the same standards of quality and consistency for generations to come. I am pleased to announce that Mendes SA, a Swiss company I trust for their commitment to product quality and consistency, has my authorization to distribute Vivomixx® in some European countries.

Physicians and patients can be confident that Vivomixx® is the formulation of my invention and is identical to the product studied and sold during the past fifteen years in every respect – same formulation, same strains, same concentration and proportions, and the same manufacturing facility.

Thanks for your time and continuous support.

Regards,

Professor Claudio De Simone
